ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This publication represents the efforts of several individuals. The original publication in 1968 drew on the theses of Alfred Bandza ("An Analysis of the Electoral Response to the Initiative and Referendum in North Dakota, 1918-1960") and James Williams Robbins ("A Consideration and Analysis of Initiated and Referred Legislation Submitted to the Electorate of North Dakota from 1940-1958"). Using these two theses, Professor Lloyd B. Omdahl, assisted by Chris Svare, completed the original compilation of measures in 1968. Secretary of State Ben Meier reviewed the compilation for accuracy. The 1975 edition was updated by David Waind, research associate in the Bureau of Governmental Affairs. The 1981 publication was done by Bureau research assistant Jeff Stroup. This 1985 publication was updated by Molly-Jo Kittelson, research associate in the Bureau of Governmental Affairs.

VOTE OF THE PEOPLE

Since the adoption of the North Dakota Constitution on October 1, 1889, five types of questions have been submitted to the electorate for approval or rejection at the polls:

1. Amendments to the Constitution as proposed by the legislative assembly or as proposed by the people through a petition procedure.
2. Statutory proposals initiated by the people through a petition procedure.
3. Acts of the legislative assembly referred to the electorate by a petition procedure.
4. Legislative acts dealing with the elective franchise.
5. A proposed new constitution, with four alternatives to certain sections, submitted by a constitutional convention.

AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION

The original North Dakota Constitution provided for submission of amendments to the people after approval in two consecutive sessions of the legislative assembly. A majority vote of the legislators elected was required. In 1918, the Constitution was amended to require a majority vote in only one legislative session before submission of the amendment to the people.

On the crest of the reform movement of the "Progressive" party, North Dakota changed its constitution in 1914 to provide for amending the Constitution through a petition procedure by the people. The petitions proposing the amendment were to be filed with the secretary of state at least six months before the election, bearing the signature of at least 25% of the legal voters in at least one-half of the counties of the state. If the people approved the amendment, it was then referred to the legislature for consideration. If the assembly adopted it, it became a part of the Constitution. If the legislature did not approve it, it returned to the ballot for another test at the polls. If approved again by the people, it became a part of the Constitution.

This cumbersome procedure met its fate at the polls in 1918 when the people approved a new initiative procedure calling for petitions with 20,000 signatures filed 120 days before the election without participation by the legislature. Approval by a majority of the voters voting on the measure made it a part of the Constitution.

On three occasions, the legislative assembly has submitted proposed amendments to the people to increase the required number of signatures for initiating constitutional amendments. All three were soundly defeated at the polls.

On March 15, 1932, the people voted 104,953 to 51,459 against increasing the number of signatures from 20,000 to 40,000.

On June 30, 1942, a proposed increase from 20,000 to 30,000 signatures was defeated by 69,904 to 52,275.

On November 4, 1958, the people defeated by a vote of 127,290 to 47,814 a proposal to change from 20,000 signatures to 10% of the vote cast for governor at the last general election.

On April 28, 1972, when the people voted on the proposed new constitution and alternatives, they approved by a vote of 76,585 to 71,062 the alternative to increase the number of signatures required for initiating constitutional amendments. The increase would have been effected by changing from the present 20,000 signatures to 4% of the state's population, or around 25,000 signatures. The increase did not become effective because none of the alternatives could become effective without the proposed constitution which was defeated.

INITIATING AND REFERRING LAWS

Even though the "initiative" and "referendum" are different types of political action, they have been treated as companion procedures since their original adoption in 1914.

The 1914 amendment to the Constitution called for petitions proposing new laws to be signed by at least 10% of the legal voters in a majority of counties and submitted to the secretary of state at least 30 days before the legislative assembly convened. When the legislature met, the secretary of state would then submit the measure for consideration. The legislature had the option of adopting it, submitting it to the people for expression of opinion, rejecting it, or offering a counter proposal.

If the legislature failed to act, rejected it, or offered a counter proposal, the measure went on the ballot at the next election. When the legislature offered a counter proposal, they both went on the ballot and the one winning by the highest vote was declared effective.

The power of "referendum" was included in the same 1914 amendment. Acts, or parts of the acts, of the legislature could be referred when a petition was signed by 10% of the number of voters who voted for secretary of state and filed within 90 days of adjournment of the legislative assembly. A referendum could also be held if a majority of the legislature decided to submit any of its own acts to a vote of the people. Measures passed by a two-thirds majority pertaining to preservation of the public peace, health or safety could not be referred.

Once again mired down in cumbersome and unworkable machinery, the reformers obtained an amendment November 5, 1918, which greatly simplified both the initiative and referendum. This amendment eliminated the legislature from the initiative process and simply required petitions signed by 10,000 qualified electors filed not later than 90 days before the election. The referendum was changed to require 7,000 signatures to refer a measure to the next election or 30,000 signatures to force a special election on a referred measure.

The legislature has tried six times since 1918 to make the provisions of the initiative and referendum more stringent. The citizenry has been unyielding. Here is the record:

Election	Proposal	For	Against
March 15, 1932	30,000 signatures to initiate 25,000 signatures to refer	50,967	100,581
June 24, 1936	20,000 signatures to initiate 20,000 signatures to refer	41,500	127,511
June 25, 1940	15,000 signatures to initiate 15,000 signatures to refer	61,573	64,639
June 30, 1942	20,000 signatures to initiate 30,000 signatures to refer 40,000 to force special election under referral	53,925	70,927

Election	Proposal	For	Against
November 4, 1958	10% of votes cast for governor to initiate 7% of votes cast for governor to refer	47,814	127,290
November 8, 1966	3% of the population to initiate 2% of the population to refer	69,116	84,131

Even though the election in 1966 was regarded as general constitutional revision the major controversy over the revision centered around proposals to change the requirements for the initiative and referendum.

In addition to the increases proposed by the legislature, the constitutional convention of 1971-72 submitted to the people the question of increasing the required signatures for the referral and the initiative to 2% of the population, or around 12,500. This proposal was approved by a vote of 76,585 to 71,062 but did not become effective because the proposed constitution itself was defeated.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE

Since statehood, Section 122 of the North Dakota Constitution has required the state legislature to submit all proposals to restrict or extend the elective franchise to the people.

". . . no law extending or restricting the right of suffrage shall be in force until adopted by a majority of the electors of the state voting at a general election."

Most such measures have involved changing the Constitution so they appear as amendments to the Constitution. One measure, on the ballot in 1966, fell under this provision.

SPECIAL ELECTIONS

The first special election involving measures requiring consideration of the people occurred June 26, 1919 after the Non-partisan League successfully passed its program through the legislature. The people ratified the NPL program in that election.

The second special election, forced due to the filing of recall petitions against the NPL governor, attorney general and commissioner of agriculture and labor, resulted in the defeat of nine different measures--some designed to hobble the league program. The program was sustained but the three primary NPL architects were turned out of office.

In 1933, the legislative assembly adopted a sales tax to tide the state's waning finances through the tough depression era. However, the proposal was referred and another special election was required on September 22 of that year. The measure was defeated 41,241 to 113,807.

In 1935, the legislature passed another sales tax measure and it was again referred. On July 15, in another special election, the measure was adopted by a vote of 75,166 to 65,890.

The 1963 legislature's tax program was referred and submitted to a vote of the people on July 17. The program, presented as several measures, was defeated by margins of five to one.

In 1965, the legislature passed another tax program. This was again referred and on September 21 this program was defeated by a vote of 99,269 to 37,886.

In 1971, a special election was required because the act of the legislature appropriating funds for the operation of the department of accounts and purchases was referred. The legislative appropriation was sustained by a vote of 61,342 to 39,076.

In 1972, another special election was called to consider a proposed new constitution and four alternatives submitted by the constitutional convention.

In 1973, the legislative apportionment plan adopted by the legislature was referred and a constitutional amendment requiring single-member senate and house districts was initiated. Both measures were considered in the special election and both were defeated. The legislative act lost by a vote of 44,363 to 50,729 and the initiated constitutional amendment lost by a vote of 43,178 to 53,831.

*In the 1966 General Election, the people voted on a measure affecting the elective franchise that was referred to them by the state legislature. This measure was approved by the people.

In the 1972 Special Election, the people voted on a new Constitution and four alternative propositions; however, these have not been included in our statistical summaries. Although one of the four alternative propositions did pass, it was of no effect as the main proposition (1972 Constitution) was defeated.
